

Potency in the face of the crisis

By Preciada Azancot

The current global economic crisis that has spread across the entire planet is not, contrary to what most politicians tell us, transitory. It will not only fail to pass or abate in the next seven years, rather it will deepen. And we may consider it to be the most severe and profound crisis to have occurred in the last two centuries, since it corresponds to the definitive collapse of the socio-political and economic system that has governed the developed world for these last two hundred years.

Indeed, following the collapse of the communist system and its lukewarm social aspirations, that revealed their ineffectiveness but that corresponded to human beings' legitimate philosophies and needs, we are now witnessing the collapse of the liberal and capitalist system as a whole. And this is due to the most legitimate and inevitable of desires of the human being of the third millennium: to build a NEW HUMANISM at least as, if not more, profound than that the Renaissance was in its day. It is reasonable to say that this collapse of a decayed, unfair and outdated system, although it made very notable conquests is, despite being traumatic and painful, healthy and beneficial. The challenge lies in finding solutions and options that invoke the greatest possible unanimity, that do not cause unnecessary victims – and all victims are unnecessary – and that provide a revolutionary although pacific flourishing of the planet's values, institutions and cultures. And we sincerely believe that MAT (www.mat21.net), science of the 21st Century Leader offers them. Generously, and for everyone.

The human being of the third millennium, and the society that he builds, needs safety, not limited to basic material needs, but rather to what is essential, in other words extending to self-knowledge and to the ability to diagnose the toxicity of others who could represent a threat to his integrity. He needs development, extending to the nourishing multiplication of options centred on the free motivation to recover the skills, talents and vocations of human beings and of the organisations that they create. He needs radical justice extended to mean leadership by the best, based on values capable of putting an end to social and gender inequalities. He needs status based on the appreciation and recognition of man and woman's creating and transforming power, be it in art, science or the creation of new socio-political systems. He needs a sense of belonging which means a safe space in which each can be himself at the same time as favouring others being their true selves. He needs fulfilment because he searches for and finds truth in freedom and in peace among men. And since the old world is collapsing, at least let's take advantage of the opportunity to build something better and longer-lasting.

MAT demonstrates (refer to the article "A safe investment") that 98% of human beings have their backs turned on their true talent and vocation and function at 20% of their innate potential, in other words, the transforming energy that they had when they were a one-day old baby. And it shows how to recover these potentials in a pain-free, calm, pleasant and scientific manner. It proposes that we detect and recover the innate values on which to build the society of the future: A BIO-MANAGEMENT in the image and likeness of its highest potentials and internal values.
